

CONNECTICUT POST

October 10, 2005

Page A8

Need to educate people on 'Woods'

It is time that the residents of this region give thought to the future of the Remington Woods in Bridgeport and Stratford. It has roadways, wildlife, water and an abundance of trees.

While attending "Stratford Day" this summer, I realized that most people had a minimum knowledge of the area. The large beautiful photos on exhibit that day caused those attending to ask where they were taken. They were taken in Remington Woods, which is on Stratford's western border. Seventy-five acres are in Stratford and 344 acres are in Bridgeport.

The property contains a beautiful lake. Henry Thoreau once wrote a lake is the landscape's most beautiful feature. The southern area adjoins the General Electric property, which fronts on Boston Avenue in Bridgeport. It is a very large tract of open land.

Such a beautiful place should not go unnoticed, particularly one this size. It is such a treasure everyone should know where it is.

Virginia L. Pederson
Stratford